JOINT CASE MANAGEMENT
STATEMENT FOR CASES INVOLVING TELECOMMUNICATIONS CARRIER
DEFENDANTS

Courtroom: 6, 17th Floor
Judge: The Hon. Vaughn R. Walker
Date: September 12, 2008
Time: 11:00 a.m.

<sup>1</sup> The parties disagree as to whether the case management conference on September 12, 2008 should include one of the cases involving state government actions---Clayton v. AT&T Commc'n of the Southwest, No. 07-01187-VRW. This report does not exclude or address that case. The parties will confer further about the matter prior to the case management conference.

INTRODUCTION

Pursuant to Civil Local Rule 16-9, the parties submit this joint case management statement in all actions brought against telecommunications carriers in MDL No. 06-1791. Its purpose is to advise the Court that the parties have conferred regarding further proceedings under the FISA Amendments Act of 2008, Pub. L. No. 110-261 (“FISAAA”),<sup>2</sup> and to set forth their respective positions about the proper course for such proceedings.

PROCEDURAL HISTORY

Consolidated in the Multi-District Litigation before this Court are 38 cases in which telecommunications carriers have been named as defendants. Those include master consolidated complaints against the BellSouth Defendants, the MCI/Verizon Defendants, the Sprint Defendants, and Cingular Wireless/AT&T Mobility Defendants, as well as 23 cases against AT&T entities (which were not consolidated under a master complaint because of the pendency of the Ninth Circuit appeals in Hepting v. AT&T Corp., 9th Cir. Nos. 06-17132, 06-17137). On August 21, the Ninth Circuit remanded Hepting to this Court “[i]n light of the FISA Amendments Act of 2008.” See Hepting, Nos. 06-17132, 06-17137, 2008 WL 3863931, at *1 (9th Cir. Aug. 21, 2008).

The impetus for the case management conference is the enactment of FISAAA.

PLAINTIFFS' POSITION

I. Introduction and Description of FISAAA Statute

In enacting the FISA Amendments Act of 2008, Congress took the unprecedented step of seeking to empower the Executive to require this Court to summarily dismiss significant constitutional and statutory claims of millions of ordinary Americans in 36 lawsuits against communications carriers consolidated in this multi-district litigation. Because of the serious constitutional and statutory interpretation questions presented by this statute on its face, and the impossibility of applying the statute until the Court makes key decisions about whether the statute

1 is constitutional and, if so, how the statute is to be applied, plaintiffs believe that the appropriate 2 course for the Court is to decide those issues prior to permitting the Government to present its 3 certifications and bring a supporting dispositive motion the case under the statute.<sup>3</sup>

4 A. The FISAAA Statute

5 On July 9, 2008, Congress passed the FISA Amendments Act of 2008 (FISAAA), which 6 the President signed into law the next day. Section 802 of the statute, codified at 50 U.S.C.
7 § 1885a, authorizes the government to seek dismissal of any “covered action” against any person
8 for “providing assistance to an element of the intelligence community” if the Attorney General 9 makes a certification to the district court that one of the following five circumstances is true:

10 (1) any assistance by that person was provided pursuant to an order of the court 11 established under section 103(a) directing such assistance;

12 (2) any assistance by that person was provided pursuant to a certification in 13 writing under section 2511(2)(a)(ii)(B) or 2709(b) of title 18, United States Code;

14 (3) any assistance by that person was provided pursuant to a directive under 15 section 102(a)(4), 105B(e), as added by section 2 of the Protect America Act of 2007 (Public Law 110-55) or 702(h) directing such assistance;

16 (4) in the case of a covered civil action, the assistance alleged to have been 17 provided by the electronic communication service provider was—18 (A) in connection with an intelligence activity involving communication that was—19 (i) authorized by the President during the period beginning on September 11, 2001 and ending on January 17, 2007; and 20 (ii) designed to detect or prevent a terrorist attack, or activities in preparation for a terrorist attack, against the United States; and 21
22 (B) the subject of a written request or directive, or a series of written 23 requests or directives, from the Attorney General . . . to the electronic 24 communication service provider indicating that the activity was—25 (i) authorized by the President; and 26 (ii) determined to be lawful; or

27
28

<sup>3</sup> Additionally, the Court should consider whether the plaintiffs in the cases against AT&T should file a consolidated complaint (something that was done in the other carrier cases but not in the AT&T cases due to the pendency of the Hepting appeal) once the mandate issues in Hepting but prior to consideration of the new FISAAA statute.

(5) the person did not provide the alleged assistance.

FISAAA § 802(a).

The statute is unprecedented, as far as plaintiffs are aware, in purporting to give the Executive discretion to command the Judiciary to dismiss pending litigation between private parties. Congress imposed no limit and gave no direction to the Executive in whether or not to exercise this discretion.

B. Scope Of Section 802

A “covered civil action” is defined as: a civil action filed in a federal or state court that (1) alleges that an electronic communication service provider furnished assistance to an element of the intelligence community and (2) seeks monetary or other relief from the electronic communication service provider related to the provision of the assistance. FISAAA § 801(5).

The statute expressly provides that any similar actions brought in state court “shall be removable under section 1441 of title 28, United States Code,” FISAAA § 802(g) and expressly preempts any actions brought by states themselves. FISAAA § 803. Thus it attempts to encompass all of the actions in this MDL that involve telecommunications carriers, including those brought originally in state court and those in which the federal government sued state officials seeking information from the carriers about their participation in warrantless surveillance of their citizens.

However, the statute does not reach any claims regarding current or future surveillance, as it is focused solely on past actions. See, e.g., FISAAA §§ 801(5) (“alleges that [Defendants] furnished assistance”); 802(a)(1-3) (“was provided”); 802(a)(4) (assistance alleged to “have been provided” pursuant to a program “ending January 17, 2007”); and 802(a)(5) (“did not provide”).

Left out from Section 802's reach are 1) surveillance alleged to have occurred prior to September 11, 2001, which is alleged in one of the MDL actions and 2) ongoing surveillance, which is alleged in most, if not all of the MDL actions.

C. Standard Of Judicial Review Of The Government's Section 802(a) Certifications

If the proper certification is made and “given effect” pursuant to Section 802(b), the Court is instructed to dismiss the litigation. However, Section 802(b) states that a “certification under

1 subsection (a) shall be given effect unless the court finds that such certification is not supported by 2 substantial evidence provided to the court pursuant to this section.” Substantial evidence review 3 requires review of the record as a whole, weighing both the evidence that supports and the 4 evidence that detracts from the Attorney General’s decision. Thus, the administrative record that 5 this Court is to consider on a substantial evidence review is not limited to those documents that the 6 Attorney General submits (see Section I (E) below) but rather, all documents and materials directly 7 or indirectly considered by agency decision-makers and includes evidence that may tend to 8 undermine or call into question the Attorney General’s stated position.<sup>4</sup>

9                   D. What The Government Must Show In Support Of Its Section 802(a) 10                   Certifications

11                   1. Section 802(a)(1) to 802(a)(3)

12                   A certification under subsections (a)(1), (a)(2), or (a)(3) of Section 802 requires the 13 Attorney General to certify that “any assistance by that person was provided pursuant to” one of 14 three specific statutory provisions that authorize surveillance in limited circumstances and in 15 accordance with specified procedures. For a certification under one of these subsections to be 16 valid, the Court must be satisfied that the surveillance met all requirements of the specified 17 statutory provision and that the specified statutory provision is a valid legal authority. Unlike pre-18 existing immunity provisions of FISA and Title III, the question here is not whether the 19 defendant’s provided information with a “good faith reliance on” such provisions (compare 18 U.S.C. § 2707), but rather whether whatever assistance occurred was actually “provided pursuant 20 to” that authority, i.e., was no more than that authorized by the identified statutory provision. This 21 will require the Court to construe and apply the identified statutory provision both factually and 22 legally, albeit under only deferential “substantial evidence” standard of appellate review with 23 respect to the facts. Thus, for example, the statute provides that a certification could be made that 24 the surveillance complied with 18 U.S.C. § 2907(b), the National Security Letter provision, 25

26                   <sup>4</sup> We anticipate that the government may raise national security other objections to some portions 27 of the agency record, which could result in ex parte, in camera review under 50 U.S.C. § 1806(f) 28 or some other mechanism to take those concerns into account, but this should not change the standard for review of agency action under the “substantial evidence” standard. See, e.g., M:06-cv-01791-VRW Dkt. No. 453 (July 2, 2008, Section 1806(f) Order in Al Haramain).

1 although that statute has been declared unconstitutional. Doe v. Gonzalez, 500 F. Supp. 2d 379 2 (S.D.N.Y. 2007). Accordingly, no assistance could be properly certified as “provided pursuant to”
3 the National Security Letter authority.

4           2.       Section 802(a)(4)

5           To be valid under subsection (a)(4), the Attorney General’s certification must show a 6 number of facts regarding the illegal and unconstitutional warrantless surveillance program at issue 7 in this litigation, such as when the program was authorized, and whether the DOJ provided the 8 defendants with a note stating the program had been “determined to be legal.”

9           A critical factual showing before this subsection is effective is whether the “intelligence 10 activity involving communications” at issue was “designed to detect or prevent a terrorist attack, or 11 activities in preparation for a terrorist attack, against the United States.” Section 802(a)(4)(A)(ii).
12 Thus, Attorney General must make a satisfactory showing that the intelligence activities were 13 designed for surveillance to detect and prevent terrorist attacks on the United States, not something 14 broader, such as dragnet domestic surveillance, or for terrorist surveillance in general, if it is not 15 specific to a “terrorist attack … against the United States.” Likewise, intelligence activities 16 designed for surveillance aimed at supporting military operations overseas, such as the Iraq war, do 17 not qualify.

18           3.       Section 802(a)(5)

19           To meet the requirements of subsection (a)(5), the Attorney General must show that “the 20 person did not provide the alleged assistance.” Thus, for each element of the plaintiffs’ claims that 21 alleges the “provision of, or the provision of access to, information (including communication 22 contents, communications records, or other information relating to a customer or communication), 23 facilities, or another form of assistance,” the Attorney General must show substantial evidence to 24 support his certification that such allegation did not occur for subsection (a)(5) to be effective.

25           E.       What The Court May Review To Determine Whether The Government Has 26                   Met Its Burden

27           FISAAA provides that the district court, in its review of a certification by the Attorney 28 General, “may examine the court order, certification, written request or the directive” that was

1 given to the electronic communications service provider. These are defined as “supplemental 2 materials.” FISAAA § 802(b)(2).

3 In addition to the Attorney General, the parties to the action are also allowed to submit “any 4 relevant court order, certification, written request or directive” to the court for review, and to 5 participate in briefing or argument “of any legal issue.” FISAAA § 802(d). While there are no
6 statutory limitations on what else may be submitted to the Court pursuant to this section, Section 7 802(d) provides that “[t]o the extent that classified information is relevant to the proceeding ... the 8 court shall review such information in camera and ex parte....”

9 In addition to formally submitting the evidence currently in the record and seeking judicial 10 notice of various admissions made by the government, Plaintiffs intend to seek discovery designed 11 to assist this Court in its review of the newly enacted defense under the substantial evidence 12 standard. See Fed. R. Civ. Proc. 26(b)(1) (“Parties may obtain discovery regarding any 13 nonprivileged matter that is relevant to any party's claim or defense — including the existence, 14 description, nature, custody, condition, and location of any documents or other tangible things and 15 the identity and location of persons who know of any discoverable matter.”). In particular, 16 plaintiffs believe that discovery will lead to evidence relevant to (1) whether the surveillance 17 program at issue was designed for dragnet domestic surveillance, instead of prevention of a 18 terrorist attack on the United States; and (2) whether Defendants “did not provide the alleged 19 assistance.”<sup>5</sup>

20 Thus, Section 802 empowers this Court to review the Supplemental Materials, but does not 21 require it to review them. It does require, however, that this Court review whatever “classified 22 information is relevant to the proceeding,” albeit “in camera and ex parte.”

23 F. Secrecy of The Court's Review and The Court's Orders

24 Section 802 has two secrecy provisions, contained in subsections (c) and (d), that reach 25 both the evidence provided to the court and, more troublingly, the court's orders. Subsection (c)

26

<sup>5</sup> Last year this Court stayed discovery pending the resolution of the interlocutory appeal of the 27 Hepting case. See Feb. 20, 2007 Order (M:06-cv-01791-VRW Dkt. No. 172). On August 21, 28 2008, the Ninth Circuit remanded Hepting to this Court, so once the mandate issues, there no longer will be an interlocutory appeal pending.

1 prohibits disclosure of Supplemental Materials at the Attorney General's discretion, while 2 subsection (d) prohibits disclosure of "classified information." Subsection (c) states that the 3 Executive is authorized to require the court to:

4 limit any public disclosure concerning . . . any public order following such in 5 camera and ex parte review, to a statement as to whether the case is dismissed and a 6 description of the legal standards that govern the order, without disclosing the 7 paragraph of subsection (a) that is the basis for the certification.

8 FISAAA§ 802(c)(2). Subsection (d) states that:

9 To the extent that classified information is relevant to the proceeding or would be 10 revealed in the determination of an issue, the court shall review such information in 11 camera and ex parte, and shall issue any part of the court's written order that would 12 reveal classified information in camera and ex parte and maintain such part under 13 seal.

14 FISAAA § 802(d). Subsection (d) also states that parties are allowed to participate in a hearing "in 15 a judicial proceeding conducted pursuant to this section, but only to the extent that such 16 participation does not require the disclosure of classified information to such party."

17 Neither subsections (c) nor (d) address judicial review of the ex parte procedures dictated 18 by the statute nor recognize this Court's authority to control access to evidence as necessary to 19 protect due process.

20 II. FISAAA is Fatally Flawed

21 While a full recital of the flaws in FISAAA is not necessary for purposes of this Case 22 Management Conference Statement, many of them are readily apparent:

23

- 24 1. Congress violated the separation of powers by attempting to usurp judicial authority 25 to decide the Fourth Amendment claims of millions of ordinary Americans who have been, and continue to be, subjected to dragnet surveillance for the past 7 years;<sup>6</sup>

27 <sup>6</sup> There is little dispute about the fact of this surveillance or that it was carried out without a 28 warrant. The Senate Select Committee on Intelligence's October 2007 Report on an earlier version of the FISA Amendments Act, Senate Report No. 110-209 ("Senate Report") states:

29 . . . beginning soon after September 11, 2001, the Executive branch provided written 30 requests or directives to U.S. electronic communication service providers to obtain their 31 assistance with communications intelligence activities that had been authorized by the 32 President.

2. Congress exceeded its constitutional authority by passing legislation that grants to the Executive the discretion to essentially dictate the outcome of specific, pending litigation;
3. The statute improperly requires dismissal of claims of illegal surveillance between September 11, 2001 and January 17, 2007, based not on a judicial finding about the facts of the surveillance or the legality or constitutionality of the surveillance, but instead merely based on a “certification” from the Attorney General that that some unknown member of the Executive branch told the carriers that some undescribed surveillance was “lawful”;
4. FISAAA denies due process to the plaintiffs by granting to the Executive, rather than the courts, the essential decisionmaking about their constitutional and statutory rights; and
5. FISAAA purports to grant to the Executive a unilateral right to require that the Court keep secret not only the evidence, but its own decisions.

In short, the statute unconstitutionally attempts to take the factual and legal decisionmaking away from the courts, for both statutory and constitutional claims. And to the extent that the FISAAA statute purports to retain the Court's role in these cases, it does so only by turning the Court, and the process of adjudication, into a shadow-play of empty gestures hidden by Executive-controlled secrecy.

III. The Court Should Determine Constitutional And Statutory Interpretation Questions Prior To Applying The Statute

Initial consideration of constitutional and key statutory interpretation questions prior to the application of the statute makes sense for three reasons.

First, this process serves judicial economy. If the Court determines that the statute is unconstitutional or otherwise improper, it need not reach the more complicated questions arising

S. Rep. No. 110-209, at 10 (October 26, 2007)(available at <<http://intelligence.senate.gov/071025/report.pdf>>); see also, Siobhan Gorman, NSA's Domestic Spying Grows As Agency Sweeps Up Data, The Wall Street Journal (March 10, 2008), at p. A1, available at <http://online.wsj.com/article/SB120511973377523845.html>; Michael Isikoff, Uncle Sam Is Still Watching You, Newsweek (July 21, 2008).

1 from the application of the statute. This accords with the Court's longstanding policy in these 2 actions of determining legal, largely nonevidentiary motions to dismiss before more complicated, 3 fact-based dispositive motions such as summary judgment. In addition, if there is concern that this 4 will slow the process, Plaintiffs can conduct targeted discovery relating to the certifications while 5 the constitutional and statutory issues are being briefed. Should the statute survive this 6 constitutional review, the evidence gathered and submitted pursuant to Section 802 will enhance 7 this Court's the consideration of whether Attorney General's certification are supported by 8 substantial evidence.

9 Second, this order of decisionmaking is the most protective of due process. While the 10 parties will likely disagree about the nature of the evidence that the court can consider under 11 Section 802 (see below), there is no question that key evidence and argument in that determination 12 will be presented by the government ex parte, in camera. Similarly, it is likely that the Attorney 13 General will demand that the key portion of any decision rendered by this Court be kept secret 14 under the FISAAA. FISAAA § 802(c). This Court has long been rightly concerned that such 15 secret processes threaten due process, and as a result, has endeavored to render decisions in this 16 case without resort to such secret evidence and argument. See, e.g., Hepting v. AT&T, 439 17 F.Supp.2d 974, 979 (N.D. Ca. 2006) (“At a May 17, 2006, hearing, the court requested additional 18 briefing from the parties addressing (1) whether this case could be decided without resolving the 19 state secrets issue, thereby obviating any need for the court to review the government's classified 20 submission”). By considering the threshold questions of constitutionality and statutory 21 construction first, the court may be able to address the impact of the FISAAA without any review 22 of additional classified submissions.

23 Third, even if the Court determines that the statute is constitutional and may be applied to 24 these cases, there are still serious questions about how to apply the statute that, if not addressed 25 initially, will make the briefing on the government's dispositive motion extremely burdensome and 26 complicated for the parties and the Court. As the Court knows, the constitutional considerations 27 will play a crucial role in interpreting the statutes, even if only by requiring particular constructions 28 to avoid constitutional tensions. Of particular importance is the scope of evidence that will be 1 admitted for the Court’s exercise of its appointed role as envisioned in Section 802.

2 For example, the Court must decide whether to consider the Klein evidence of the dragnet 3 surveillance facility on Folsom Street in San Francisco and elsewhere, the large number of 4 admissions by the Executive about the surveillance, and the even greater number of admissions by 5 members of Congress and congressional committee reports—many more of which were made 6 during the recent congressional battle that led to the passage of FISAAA. The government and the 7 defendants’ assert that the parties can address the “relevance and propriety” of considering this 8 evidence as part of the briefing on the application of the statute, but that course would require the 9 parties to present, build argument around and respond to a huge amount of evidence without 10 knowing whether the court will even decide to consider it. This would be grossly inefficient for 11 both the parties and the court. It makes sense, before proceeding to adjudicate whether there is 12 substantial evidence to support a claim, to first determine what evidence should be—or, in order to 13 preserve constitutionality, must be—admitted.

14 Fourth, Plaintiffs’ view is that discovery permitted by Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 15 26(b)(1) has not been eliminated by FISAAA; defendants and the government disagree..
16 Determining what discovery is permissible, as a matter of statutory interpretation and as required to 17 avoid constitutional infirmity, should logically occur before briefing occurs on whether the 18 certifications are supported by substantial evidence, the issue to which the discovery is relevant.

19 Defendants and the government are fundamentally confused when they argue that “nowhere 20 does [Section 802] grant plaintiffs any right to discovery,” or that Congress was not 21 “simultaneously permitting civil discovery of the very same information.” Congress did not need 22 to “permit” or “grant” discovery in FISAAA. Rule 26 already does that for FISAAA as it does for 23 all other statutes. Instead, Congress needed to clearly and affirmatively deny discovery in FISAAA 24 if it wanted to displace Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 26. Plainly, Congress did not do so.

25 Since the statute itself is silent about discovery, the government and Defendants’ argument 26 is based entirely on floor statements by three Senators and a letter to Congress from the Attorney 27 General. It would be extraordinary and unprecedented for a court to graft an entirely new provision 28 onto a statute based on a selection of floor statements and a letter from the Attorney General, who

1 is counsel to a party to this lawsuit. At best, the defendants and government have an argument that 2 Congress intended to prevent classified information from being disclosed to the plaintiffs. As to 3 the Court, the statute not only authorizes the court to look at classified information, it requires the 4 court to do so: “To the extent that classified information is relevant to the proceeding or would be 5 revealed in the determination of an issue, the court shall review such information in camera and ex 6 parte.” FISAAA § 802(d) (emphasis added).

7 This procedure is consistent with 50 U.S.C. § 1806(f), and Congress was aware at the time
8 it enacted FISAAA that the Court had ruled that section 1806(f) preempts the state secrets privilege 9 with respect to electronic surveillance. 154 Cong. Rec. S6381 (Statement of Sen. Feingold 10 describing the Court’s ruling: “A Federal Court has now held that the State secrets privilege does 11 not apply to claims brought under FISA. Rather, more specific evidentiary rules in FISA govern in 12 situations such as that.”), S6382 (statement of Sen. Feingold: “It says that FISA is in fact the 13 exclusive means and that the evidentiary rules regarding FISA should control, rather than State 14 secrets.”), S6386 (statement of Sen. Boxer quoting this Court’s ruling), S6464 (statement of Sen.
15 Dodd quoting this Court’s ruling), S6472 (statement of Sen. Feinstein quoting this Court’s ruling).
16 Thus, the government and defendants’ argument ultimately may result in a situation in which at 17 least some of the information sought in discovery is reviewed by the court in camera, consistent 18 with section 802(d) and 50 U.S.C. § 1806(f), but this argument does not support dispensing with 19 discovery entirely.<sup>7</sup>

20

21 <sup>7</sup> Defendants and the government also erroneously assert that discovery would be inconsistent with 22 the Ninth Circuit’s recent remand of the interlocutory appeal in Hepting. As they are both well 23 aware, the government’s position before the Ninth Circuit was that the “very subject matter” of the 24 Hepting case was barred by the state secrets privilege, not whether any particular piece of evidence 25 was barred. Moreover, by exercising its discretion under FISAAA, the government will waive the 26 state secrets privilege as to the very information it claimed created the “very subject matter” bar – 27 it will tell the court whether there was a secret espionage relationship between the carriers and the 28 government and, if the court seeks it, must provide documentation was given to the carriers to support the government’s request for the information. This state secrets waiver under FISAAA, and the Court’s recent ruling that 50 U.S.C. § 1806(f) preempts the state secrets privilege, is the basis on which Plaintiffs asked for the appeal to be dismissed. The government sought a stay (“abeyance”) of the appeal rather than remand, but the Ninth Circuit rejected the government’s request and instead granted Plaintiffs’ request to dismiss the appeal without ruling on the merits of the appeal. The Ninth Circuit made no determination regarding the application of FISAAA here,

1           Further supporting the conclusion that Plaintiffs are entitled to discovery is the fact that the 2 Government's motion will necessarily be a summary judgment motion. The government 3 sometimes refers to the motion it plans to bring as a "motion to dismiss" and sometime refers to it 4 as a "dispositive motion." Since FISAAA requires the government to submit extrinsic evidence to 5 the court, however, and since in opposition plaintiffs cannot rest merely on the allegations of their 6 complaints, the government's motion will necessarily be a summary judgment motion rather than a 7 motion to dismiss. See Fed. R. Civ. Proc. 12(d). Accordingly, Plaintiffs "must be given a 8 reasonable opportunity to present all the material that is pertinent to the motion." Ibid.; see also 9 Fed. R. Civ. Proc. 56(f) (providing for continuances of summary judgment motions "to enable 10 affidavits to be obtained, depositions to be taken, or other discovery to be undertaken" so that 11 opposing party can obtain "facts essential to justify its opposition").

12           If the Court were faced with the government's attempt to apply the statute in a motion for 13 summary judgment before the Court had first determined the extent of discovery available, 14 Plaintiffs' opposition to the motion would have to include extensive arguments about why 15 Plaintiffs are entitled to discovery despite the government's anticipated objections, what discovery 16 they would have issued, and what that discovery may show. Threshold statutory interpretation 17 decisions by the Court presents a far superior alternative.

18           Defendants' response is that consideration of constitutional and statutory interpretation 19 issues first would be premature, since there would be no "live and concrete controversy" regarding 20 FISAAA's dismissal procedure. But the controversy is sufficiently live now – the government has 21 unequivocally stated its intention to invoke the procedure provided in FISAAA – and given the 22 secret nature of the proceedings, there is no benefit in requiring the plaintiffs to wait until after a 23 secret filing of secret evidence before attacking the threshold problems with the statute that do not

26           nor could it have, given that the limited scope of its 28 U.S.C. § 1292(b) appellate jurisdiction was 27 strictly limited to the Court's July 20, 2006 order. Yamaha Motor Corp. v. Calhoun, 516 U.S. 199, 28 205 (1996); United States v. Stanley, 483 U.S. 669, 676 (1987).

1 turn on the specifics of that secret filing.<sup>8</sup>

2 IV. Proposed Briefing Schedule

3 Plaintiffs propose the following briefing schedule, which contemplates that the Court will 4 lift the current stays in place in the various cases:

Plaintiffs' Opening Brief on Constitutionality and Statutory Interpretation	October 9, 2008
Defendant and Government Opposing Briefs	November 6, 2008
Amicus briefs in support of Plaintiffs or Defendants	November 20, 2008
Plaintiffs' Reply Brief	November 26, 2008
Response of Plaintiffs and Defendants to any amicus	December 4, 2008
Hearing	December 18, 2008

14 Once the Court has ruled on the constitutionality of the statute and the key statutory interpretation 15 questions, it can then, if necessary, set a briefing schedule for the filing of the government's 16 certifications and its dispositive motion. Alternatively, if the Court determines that, although the 17 filing of the government's dispositive motion should be deferred, the government may nonetheless 18 file its certifications before briefing occurs on the constitutional and statutory interpretation issues, 19 Plaintiffs ask that filing of the certifications occur on or about October 1, 2008, and that the 20 briefing schedule set forth above follow.

21 A. Proposed Page Limits

22 The issues before the court are complex, encompassing weighty and unprecedented issues 23 of separation of powers, due process and the application of the Fourth Amendment, along with 24 issues of access to discovery and publication of court orders under the First Amendment and other 25 questions of how to interpret a novel and unique statute. Plaintiffs seek leave to file a 60 page 27 <sup>8</sup> The Government characterizes plaintiffs' challenge as a "facial" one, but that is incorrect.

28 Plaintiffs intend to challenge the statute as it would be applied to their cases, not under the legal standards of "facial" challenges.

1 opening brief and a 30 page reply.<sup>9</sup>

2 Plaintiffs also request that the government and the carriers combined should similarly be 3 granted leave to file no more than 60 page in opposition, divided as they see fit. This makes the 4 initial briefing even on both sides of the issue, as it is in a regular motion. This is the arrangement 5 of page limits that the court ordered during the similarly three-sided motion to dismiss in Hepting 6 in May and June 2006. Moreover, unlike in that briefing (where AT&T separately moved to 7 dismiss and raised its own immunities and other arguments separate from the states secrets 8 privilege arguments on which the government based its motion to dismiss) the government here is 9 the only party granted the authority to seek dismissal under the statute. The carriers have no 10 separate grounds for invoking the statute, and thus no separate motion to make or unique 11 arguments. As such, their presentation will be wholly derivative of the government's possible 12 arguments, and it would be especially unfair to allow more pages to Defendants and government 13 combined for such a presentation than the Plaintiffs receive to respond to them.

14 Plaintiffs suggest that amici be granted 15 pages each and the parties be granted 15 pages to 15 respond to any amicus brief filed.

16 B. Alternative Schedule and Page Limits if Government is Allowed to Move to 17 Dismiss Prior to Consideration of Constitutional Issues

18 Alternatively, if the Court determines that the government should be allowed to make its 19 dispositive motion before the Court considers the constitutional and statutory interpretation issues, 20 Plaintiffs seek a schedule that allows them to cross-move for a determination that the statute is 21 unconstitutional and cannot be applied to the MDL actions and for a determination on the statutory 22 interpretation questions separately from the application of the statute. The schedule we propose is 23 longer than the schedule above because the parties will be briefing cross-motions rather than a 24 single motion. It is as follows:

25
26
27 <sup>9</sup> If the Court permits the government and Defendants to file significantly more total pages than 28 those proposed here, Plaintiffs will seek an extended schedule to allow reasonable time to consider and respond to the expanded presentation by Defendants and the government.

1	Government Opening Brief in support of its Dispositive Motion	Date chosen by government and Defendants
2	Plaintiffs' Opposition Brief to Dispositive Motion and separate Cross-Motion on Constitutionality and Statutory Interpretation issues	6 weeks after Opening Briefs
3	Government Reply Briefs in support of its Dispositive Motion and separate Government and Defendant Oppositions to Plaintiffs' Cross-Motion	6 weeks after Opposition and Cross-Motion
4	Amicus briefs in support of either party	1 week after government and Defendants' Reply Briefs and Opposition to Cross-Motion
5	Plaintiffs' Reply Brief on Cross-Motion and responses to any amicus briefs by either party	3 weeks after amicus briefs
6	Hearing	2 weeks after Plaintiffs' Reply on Cross-Motion and responses to amicus briefs

In the event that the Court adopts this process, Plaintiffs request that government have no more than 25 pages combined for its opening briefs on its dispositive motion, that Plaintiffs be granted 25 pages to oppose the government dispositive motion,<sup>10</sup> and 60 pages for Plaintiffs' cross-motion. The government and Defendants should have 60 combined pages for opposition to Plaintiffs' cross-motion and the government should be granted 15 pages for its separate reply in support of its dispositive motion. Plaintiffs then should be granted 30 pages for reply in support of their cross-motion. Both amicus briefs and replies to amicus briefs should be limited to 15 pages.

20           C.     Response to Defendants and Government's Suggestions.

21           1.     The MDL Cases Are Stayed: No Filings Can be Made Until The Stays Are Lifted

22           The government asserts that it "is prepared to" file its certifications under FISAAA and an accompanying dispositive motion no later than September 12, 2008," seemingly prior to the Case

26           10 Note that, in the event that the government seeks dismissal under different provisions of Section 27 802 for different carriers, Plaintiffs will likely need additional pages to respond to such carrier-by-carrier arguments.

1 Management Conference.<sup>11</sup> Such a preemptive filing would be improper for several reasons. First,
2 these MDL cases are all effectively stayed in various ways. Hepting and the State Official cases
3 are stayed pending the issuance of the mandate from the Ninth Circuit. (M:06-cv-01791-VRW 4 Dkt. Nos. 172 (Hepting) and 334 (State Officials)). Under ordinary court rules, the mandate will 5 not issue until 52 days after August 21, when the order of remand was issued by the Court of 6 Appeals, or October 12, 2008. Fed. R. App. Pro. 40, 41. The BellSouth consolidated cases are 7 stayed pending the court's determination of the motions to dismiss brought in the Verizon cases.
8 M:06-cv-01791-VRW Dkt. Nos. 209. And those motions to dismiss brought in the Verizon cases 9 have been terminated (M:06-cv-01791-VRW Dkt. No. 438) pending petition by the parties to 10 reopen them at a case management conference. The Sprint and Cingular consolidated cases are 11 stayed until 60 days after the Ninth Circuit's mandate in Hepting issues and is filed in this Court.
12 M:06-cv-01791-VRW Dkt. Nos 163, 177. Thus, this Court must grant leave to the parties before 13 any action can be taken by any party in the MDL.

14 The first step that must be taken before any substantive filing by any party, then, is for the 15 court to lift the various stays and set a schedule. That is what the Case Management Conference is 16 for. And a key question for the Court at that Conference is whether the constitutional and statutory 17 interpretation issues presented by FISAAA should be decided prior to application of the statute 18 through secret court submissions. The government threatens to upend this process, and apparently 19 force its view of the proper process on plaintiffs and the Court, by filing its intended motion on 20 September 12, presumably prior to the CMC. This sort of gamesmanship is improper and the 21 Court should reject any such attempted filing.

22 2. Defendants' And The Government's Proposed Briefing Schedule And Page 23 Limits Are Unfair.

24 As argued above, the appropriate order of briefing is for the Court to hear and decide the 25 constitutionality and the statutory interpretation issues before considering the application of the 26 <sup>11</sup> The government originally said that it would be filing its certification and motion by September 27 10, 2008, two days prior to the CMC, but changed its position during the course of the meet and 28 confer on this joint statement. Given this, plaintiffs remain concerned that the government intends to file its certifications before giving the court a chance to consider the proper order of matters in the Case Management Conference.

1 statute. Yet even if the Court disagrees and adopts the government's basic proposal, the actual 2 briefing schedule and page limits proposed by Defendants and the government are manifestly 3 unfair. At the outset, it is important to recall that the FISAAA grants only to the government the 4 right to present certifications and require dismissal. Likewise, Plaintiffs' motion on the 5 constitutionality and statutory interpretation issues is directed at the government, not at Defendants.
6 Defendants are neither the moving nor the opposing parties on any of these motions. As a result, 7 while Section 802 does provide Defendants with a statutory right "to participate in the briefing or 8 argument of any legal issue," see Section 802(d)),<sup>12</sup> this does not mean that Defendants and the 9 government are entitled to double the amount of briefing that the Plaintiffs may submit on the 10 issues arising from the constitutionality and interpretation of FISAAA Section 802. To the 11 contrary, for purposes of determining page limits for briefs, the Defendants briefs should be 12 considered as an extension of the government's presentation.

13 Yet their proposed briefing schedule is hugely lopsided. It contemplates that the 14 government and the carriers will each receive 50 pages to brief the constitutional and statutory 15 interpretation issues arising in plaintiffs' cross-motion, for 100 pages total. It then provides that 16 the plaintiffs will only receive 30 pages to respond. Since Plaintiffs file the first brief on the 17 constitutionality and statutory interpretation, this proposal allows Plaintiffs only one page to 18 respond to every three pages of argument brought by the government and Defendants. Defendants 19 and the government had originally proposed a mere 80 pages total for plaintiffs in response to their 20 125 pages, but then unilaterally added 20 more pages to their proposal for plaintiffs' opening 21 briefs, bringing the total count to 125 pages from government and Defendants to 100 from 22 plaintiffs. Yet the addition of twenty additional pages before defendants and the governments brief, 23 while welcome, does not cure the more serious problem that plaintiffs have a mere 30 pages to 24 respond to 100 pages of briefing by two adversaries.

25 Compounding the problem, the schedule proposed by the government and the Defendants 26

27 <sup>12</sup> In addition, Section 802 provides that Defendants may present "any relevant court order, 28 certification, written request, or directive." Id. Presumably Defendants will do so as part of the initial filing, not as part of any opposition on constitutional or statutory interpretation issues.

1 contemplates that Plaintiffs will respond to this 100 pages of combined briefing in just over two 2 weeks (16 days). For comparison, Defendants and the government seek to grant themselves a full 3 four weeks to respond to Plaintiffs' opposition and constitutional challenge.<sup>13</sup> Plaintiffs also note
4 that the schedule proposed by the Defendants and the government appears to shortchange the Court 5 in its time to consider the issues raised in the motion and cross-motion, since it sets the final brief 6 to be filed the day before the Thanksgiving holiday and the hearing only 2 weeks later without 7 allowing the Court any additional time due to the holiday. Presumably it was due to this 8 observation by plaintiffs that defendants added "or December 18, 2008" to their proposed briefing 9 schedule.

10 In contrast, Plaintiffs propose schedules that are fair to all parties (and the Court). It 11 provides extra time and extra pages evenly to both parties. It is consistent with the briefing 12 schedules and page limits that are routinely set in the Northern District when courts are faced with 13 complex, constitutional and statutory interpretation issues first impression such as FISAAA 14 presents. Indeed, in this case the briefing schedule on Verizon's motions to dismiss, which were 15 not nearly so complex and largely duplicative of the AT&T motions filed the year before, stretched 16 much longer, over four months from April through August, 2006.

17       3.     Defendants' Request For A Stay

18 Defendants seek a stay of all litigation activities in all of the carrier MDL cases other than 19 the resolution of the immunity issue. As described above, however, most matters in the various 20 MDL carrier cases are already stayed, or at least halted, and will continue to be halted until after 21 the Verizon motions to dismiss are decided or the mandate issues in Hepting. However, for those 22 cases where a duty to serve a responsive pleading or a motion under Rule 12 are triggered by the 23 upcoming issuance of the mandate by the Ninth Circuit in Hepting, Plaintiffs are agreeable to 24 stipulate to extend those deadlines until after resolution of the FISAAA immunity questions.
25 Plaintiffs are not willing to stipulate to stay discovery or other matters, however. As described 26 above, Plaintiffs affirmatively require discovery specific to the immunity issue.

27
28

<sup>13</sup> And of course the defendants and the government have also had two months to consider the new statute since it's passage.

THE POSITION OF THE GOVERNMENT AND THE CARRIER DEFENDANTS

A. Overview of FISAAA

On July 10, 2008, the President signed into law Public Law No. 110-261, the FISA Amendments Act of 2008, which passed both houses of Congress with substantial bipartisan majorities. The statute's express purpose is to require the "prompt[] dismiss[al]" of "a civil action ... against any person for providing assistance to an element of the intelligence community," where specified criteria are met. See FISA § 802(a). The statute is clear in establishing the procedure that the government and this Court must follow to determine whether such an action must be dismissed: the statutorily designated first step is the filing by the Attorney General of certifications, which are a mechanism for dismissal. If in response plaintiffs wish to challenge the constitutionality of FISAAA, as they indicate that they intend to do, they may raise any such challenge in opposition to the motions to dismiss.

First, the Attorney General must certify to the court that the cases he would seek to dismiss meet designated criteria. See id. § 802(a)(1) - (5).<sup>14</sup> We leave for another day a response to

<sup>14</sup> Specifically, the Attorney General must certify that

- (1) any assistance by that person was provided pursuant to an order of the court established under section 103(a) directing such assistance;
- (2) any assistance by that person was provided pursuant to a certification in writing under section 2511(2)(a)(ii)(B) or 2709(b) of title 18, United States Code;
- (3) any assistance by that person was provided pursuant to a directive under section 102(a)(4), 105B(e), as added by section 2 of the Protect America Act of 2007 (Public Law 110-55), or 702(h) directing such assistance;
- (4) in the case of a covered civil action, the assistance alleged to have been provided by the electronic communication service provider was—
  - (A) in connection with an intelligence activity involving communications that was—
    - (i) authorized by the President during the period beginning on September 11, 2001, and ending on January 17, 2007; and
    - (ii) designed to detect or prevent a terrorist attack, or activities in preparation for a terrorist attack, against the United States; and
  - (B) the subject of a written request or directive, or a series of written requests or directives, from the Attorney General or the head of an element of the intelligence community (or the deputy of such person) to the electronic communication service provider indicating that the activity was—
    - (i) authorized by the President; and
    - (ii) determined to be lawful; or
- (5) the person did not provide the alleged assistance.

FISA § 802(a)(1) - (5).

1 plaintiffs' demonstrably incorrect suggestion that the statute does not cover pre-9/11 conduct or 2 ongoing surveillance. It suffices to note here that the orders, certifications and directives 3 referenced in § 802(a)(1) - (3), as well as the non-occurrence of the alleged activity described in § 4 802(a)(5), are sufficient to cover pre-9/11 or ongoing foreign intelligence surveillance.

5 Second, the submission of a certification triggers court review: the certification "shall be 6 given effect unless the court finds that such certification is not supported by substantial evidence 7 provided to the court pursuant to this section." Id. § 802(b)(1). In reviewing the certification, the 8 court may consider certain materials, which again are specified by the statute itself. Id. § 9 802(b)(2), (d). The statute also sets forth security procedures to govern the handling and 10 nondisclosure of such materials. Id. § 802(c), (d). These security procedures embody the same 11 types of protections required by the state secrets privilege in cases of this sort. And, pertinent here, 12 the statute permits "[a]ny plaintiff or defendant in a civil action" to "participate in the briefing or 13 argument of any legal issue in a judicial proceeding conducted pursuant to this section." Id. § 14 802(d).

15 Third, the statute specifies the terms of dismissal. Unless the certification is unsupported 16 by substantial evidence, the "civil action may not lie or be maintained ... , and shall be promptly 17 dismissed." Id. § 802(a). Contrary to plaintiffs' hyperbolic assertions that the judiciary simply 18 responds to executive "command" under this procedure, and that the executive "dictate[s] the 19 outcome" and "usurp[s] judicial authority," this well-recognized mode of judicial review presents 20 no special threat to the proper function of a reviewing court.

21 Fourth, and finally, the statute permits immediate interlocutory review of the court's ruling:
22 "The courts of appeals shall have jurisdiction of appeals from interlocutory orders of the district 23 courts of the United States granting or denying a motion to dismiss or for summary judgment under 24 this section." Id. § 802(f).<sup>15</sup>

25 <sup>15</sup> Plaintiffs forecast a variety of constitutional objections to this procedure. These issues are far 26 beyond the proper scope of this Case Management Statement, the purpose of which is to discuss a 27 schedule and process for briefing these same issues at a later date. At the appropriate time, the 28 government and the carriers will demonstrate that each of plaintiffs' constitutional objections is without merit. FISAAA represents an unobjectionable exercise by Congress of its power to enact rules of law in the national interest to define who shall be liable under what circumstances.

1                   B. The Government's Motion

2                   Consistent with the statute, the government is prepared to file certifications and supporting 3 motions to dismiss no later than September 12, 2008. Congress left the issue of whether and when 4 to file a certification to the discretion of the Attorney General, and provided that a certification 5 "shall be given effect" if supported by substantial evidence. FISA § 802(b)(1). In so doing, 6 Congress unambiguously granted the Attorney General the right to file a certification and to seek 7 dismissal of the covered civil actions. The United States anticipates that this initial filing will be 8 relatively short.

9                   Plaintiffs make the remarkable suggestion that the filing of the Attorney General's 10 certification and dispositive motions would be "gamesmanship" and "improper" because, they 11 argue, these MDL proceedings are "effectively stayed" until the mandate issues in Hepting. But 12 plaintiffs themselves have proposed that they be permitted to file briefs on October 9 before any 13 mandate issues, which they believe will be on October 12. In any event, the existing stays are not 14 linked to the issuance of a "mandate" from the Ninth Circuit. See Dkt. 172 (Hepting stay); Dkts.
15 163, 177, 199 (stays pending resolution of the Hepting appeals); Dkt. 209 (BellSouth stay linked to 16 disposition of motion to dismiss MCI/Verizon cases (which were not stayed)). It is hardly apparent 17 that a mandate will issue in Hepting; and the Ninth Circuit has already made clear that it is 18 remanding Hepting to this court.

19                   C. Suggested Briefing Schedule

20                   The joint position of the government and the carrier defendants regarding further briefing 21 on the government's dispositive motions is as follows. Following the government's certifications 22 and accompanying motions, plaintiffs may oppose the motion to dismiss on whatever basis they 23 deem appropriate, including the constitutional arguments they have previewed herein. The 24 government and the carrier defendants then will file reply briefs in support of the initial motions to 25 dismiss, which also would function as opposition briefs on the constitutional arguments raised in 26 plaintiffs' opposition brief. Finally, plaintiffs have argued that, because their opposition brief 27 would be the first presentation of their constitutional objections, they should be permitted to file a 28 surreply. The government and carrier defendants have no objection to that request.

1           We respectfully propose the following schedule for briefing and a hearing on the 2 government's dispositive motions, which approximates the overall timetable, although not the 3 structure, envisioned by the plaintiffs:

Filing/event	Page limit	Date
Plaintiffs' opposition with constitutional challenge	70 pages	Friday, Oct. 10
United States and carrier replies	50 pages for the government; 50 pages for the carrier defendant group	Monday, Nov. 10
Plaintiffs' surreply	30 pages	Wednesday, Nov. 26
Hearing		Thursday, Dec. 11, or Thursday, Dec. 18

14           Plaintiffs' proposal to litigate and decide constitutional issues first in the absence of any 15 concrete application or invocation of the statutory dismissal mechanism would turn the statutory 16 scheme on its head and contravene basic principles of judicial process. Plaintiffs propose to begin 17 the briefing with a facial challenge to the statute's constitutionality, even before that statute has 18 been invoked, implemented or applied in this case.<sup>16</sup> The first step contemplated by Congress, 19 however, is the filing of certifications and motions to dismiss. Such filings are the necessary 20 starting point for considering the statute's application and validity. To permit plaintiffs to raise a 21 constitutional challenge before the certifications and motions to dismiss are filed would be 22 premature; absent a certification there is no live and concrete controversy regarding the 23 applicability of FISAAA's dismissal procedure.

24           In addition, whatever arguments plaintiffs might raise regarding "key statutory 25 interpretation questions" are properly raised in the course of applying the statute. Plaintiffs argue

27           <sup>16</sup> Nothing in the Act requires the Attorney General to exercise his discretion to make the 28 authorized certifications, and until he actually decides to invoke the procedures authorized by Congress, the Act would have no impact on this litigation.

1 that two issues of “statutory interpretation” require consideration in advance of any certification:
2 whether discovery is permitted and what evidence may be considered in connection with a 3 certification under the Act. But plaintiffs’ contention as to each issue is extremely weak, and both 4 arguments are properly addressed in response to a dispositive motion.

5 D. Plaintiffs’ Request For Discovery

6 This is especially true of plaintiffs’ extraordinary request to delay prompt consideration of 7 the Attorney General’s certifications in order to permit them to engage in discovery. That request 8 is flatly inconsistent with the statute. The statute is directed in plain terms at resolving this 9 litigation without the kind of discovery that the plaintiffs now demand. Section 802 details the 10 “procedures for implementing statutory defenses,” but nowhere does it grant plaintiffs any right to 11 discovery. To the contrary, in defining the “Role of the Parties,” FISAAA provides no 12 opportunity, or reason, for discovery. It authorizes the parties to “submit any relevant court order, 13 certification, written request, or directive to the district court,” and permits them to participate in 14 “briefing or argument of any legal issue in” the proceeding. FISA § 802(d). Discovery is neither 15 necessary nor appropriate for the parties to perform this significant but defined role.

16 The legislative history confirms what the statute makes clear: Congress did not intend to 17 open the door to discovery. Senator Rockefeller – the bill’s Senate manager and Chairman of the 18 Senate Select Committee on Intelligence – explained that “the parties cannot seek discovery to 19 provide the court with information as to whether the substantial evidence test is met.” 154 Cong.
20 Rec. S6386, S6405 (daily ed. July 8, 2008) (emphasis added). Indeed, plaintiffs’ request for 21 discovery is contrary to one of FISAAA’s fundamental purposes – to provide a means to resolve 22 these cases without compromising classified national security information.<sup>17</sup> This purpose is 23 reflected in multiple provisions of the statute. See, e.g., FISA § 802(d) (private parties may 25 <sup>17</sup> See, e.g., 154 Cong. Rec. H5743, H5757 (daily ed. June 20, 2008) (“allowing litigation over 26 these matters risks the disclosure of highly classified information regarding intelligence sources 27 and methods” (letter from Attorney General Mukasey and Director of National Intelligence McConnell)); 154 Cong. Rec. S6454, S6456 (July 9, 2008) (“The possible disclosure of classified 28 materials from ongoing court proceedings is a grave threat to national security....” (statement of

2 require the disclosure of classified information to such party”); id. § 802(c) (authorizing the 3 Attorney General to protect classified information included in the government’s submission by 4 declaring that disclosure of the information “would harm the national security of the United 5 States”). These provisions were adopted to protect classified information, including which, if any, 6 providers assisted the government in the manner alleged. See 154 Cong. Rec. S6386, S6393 (daily 7 ed. July 8, 2008) (statement of Sen. Bond); S. Rep. No. 110-209, at 23 (2007).<sup>18</sup> Here, plaintiffs 8 seek discovery regarding highly classified information: (1) the nature of any surveillance program 9 at issue (including whether it was designed to detect or prevent a terrorist attack, or activities in 10 preparation for such an attack, against the United States), and (2) whether the defendants provided 11 the alleged assistance. See supra. It is inconceivable that Congress would have gone to such 12 lengths to protect that information while simultaneously permitting civil discovery of the very

15
16<sup>18</sup> Consistent with this purpose, following enactment of FISAAA, the Court of Appeals remanded 17 the Hepting state secrets appeal. See Hepting, Nos. 06-17132, 06-17137, 2008 WL 3863931 (Aug.
18 21, 2008). Plaintiffs’ contention that discovery – and the inevitable state secrets issues that 19 discovery would raise – should precede application of FISAAA cannot be reconciled with the 20 Ninth Circuit’s determination that, “[i]n light of” FISAAA’s enactment, it need not now decide 21 whether and how the state secrets privilege should apply to this case. Id. at *1. And plaintiffs’ 22 overall position – that the government cannot seek to implement the statute by motion, but that 23 plaintiffs may seek discovery that will undoubtedly implicate the very state secrets privilege issues 24 that arose previously – turns the statute completely upside down and is a prescription for the very 25 litigation burdens that the statute expressly seeks to preclude.

26 Aside from their erroneous reading of the issues that were raised in the Hepting appeal, 27 plaintiffs’ suggestion that the state secrets privilege would be waived by any certification under the 28 Act is obviously wrong. FISAAA expressly preserves privilege assertions, see FISA § 802(h), and also plainly protects from public disclosure (and from the plaintiffs) the basis of any certification, including whether or not particular defendants assisted the NSA with respect to alleged activities –
i.e., the very information subject to the government’s privilege assertion. See id. § 802(c), (d).
Also, the fact that plaintiffs would seek to invoke proceedings under § 1806(f) of FISA, when Congress has now enacted distinct procedures for addressing the specific claims in this case through § 802(a), underscores that plaintiffs’ approach would lead immediately to protracted litigation over disputed issues.

1 same information. In any event, argument on this score is properly presented in the course of 2 briefing on the Government's dispositive motion.<sup>19</sup>

3 In addition, the question of whether plaintiffs may submit evidence in connection with the 4 certification is also properly addressed in response to the Government's motion. The Act defines 5 the materials that the Court may examine in connection with a certification. See FISA § 802(b)(2).
6 If plaintiffs wish to introduce materials in opposition to the government's motion to dismiss – 7 whether “the Klein evidence” or the “admissions by members of Congress” – they can seek to do 8 so, and the parties can brief the relevance and propriety of considering that evidence in the course 9 of a concrete adjudication of the application of the statute.

10 E. Problems With Plaintiffs' Proposed Briefing Schedule And Page Limits

11 Regarding the briefing schedule and page limits, plaintiffs' primary proposal closely tracks 12 the briefing schedule we have proposed. For unexplained reasons, however, they would 13 substantially extend the briefing schedule if the government's motion to dismiss rather than their 14 constitutional challenge is filed first. This makes little sense. Plaintiffs do not propose to make 15 their constitutional argument until October 9 in any event, and as noted above, the government is 16 prepared to file its certification and motion to dismiss by September 12. And the suggestion that 17 our “proposed briefing schedule is hugely lopsided” is inaccurate. Plaintiffs will have had two 18 months since FISAAA's passage to prepare their constitutional arguments, whereas the government 19 and carrier defendants will have just 30 days to respond to whatever arguments plaintiffs may 20 make. A period in excess of two weeks for their surreply is hardly uncommonly short. As to page 21 limits, 100 pages for plaintiffs and 125 pages for the government and carrier defendants combined 22 cannot be characterized as “hugely lopsided,” as it is standard practice for the moving party to have

23 <sup>19</sup> Even if the government were required to seek summary judgment, as plaintiffs contend, such a 24 motion would not “further support the conclusion that Plaintiffs are entitled to discovery” – let 25 alone discovery sought before the filing of the government's motion. On the contrary, in any Rule 26 56(f) proceeding, a party opposing summary judgment must demonstrate “by affidavit that, for 27 specified reasons, it cannot present facts essential to justify its opposition,” and seek either denial 28 of the motion or a continuance for discovery relevant to a genuine issue of material fact. See Fed.
R. Civ. P. 56(f). Thus, even under plaintiffs' analysis, whether discovery were proper under the applicable standard of review and governing law could only be determined after the government's motion is filed and challenged by plaintiffs in any opposition, including under Rule 56(f).

1 additional pages – which of course is what plaintiffs seek in their primary proposal. Moreover, as a 2 matter of long-standing practice, the government does not file joint briefs with private parties and 3 thus it is unfair to charge the carriers with the pages that the government may take to brief an issue.

4 Plaintiffs’ suggestion that the carriers are merely an “extension” of the government is 5 incorrect. The carriers are the defendants here. They have been sued by these plaintiffs for billions 6 of dollars. The statute, although it must be invoked by the government, creates a bar to the 7 carriers’ liability. And, most critically, the statute expressly recognizes this by giving the carriers 8 the same statutory right to brief legal issues as plaintiffs. Whatever plaintiffs may mean to suggest 9 by asserting that their constitutional arguments are “directed at the government,” Congress plainly 10 felt that the parties should be heard from and said so in the statutory text. The suggestion that the 11 carriers are not full actors in this process, with full rights to participate and a full opportunity to be 12 heard separate from the government, is mistaken.

13 In addition, the government and carrier defendants do not believe that the briefing schedule 14 needs to be extended to accommodate separate amicus briefs and related responsive filings.
15 Amicus filings, if any, should be submitted at the same time as the briefs of the parties they 16 support, and if the parties wish to respond to arguments made solely by amici, they can do so in 17 their principal filings rather than in separate briefs. The government and the carriers agree with 18 plaintiffs that a 15-page limit for amicus briefs is appropriate and that, if amicus briefs are 19 permitted, extra pages should be provided as appropriate to respond to that additional briefing.

20 F. The Need For A Stay Of Other Proceedings

21 Finally, the United States and the carriers submit that further proceedings in these cases 22 should be stayed pending resolution of the United States’ motions to dismiss. Under the terms of 23 existing stay orders in these cases, the Ninth Circuit’s remand triggers various obligations, such as 24 the requirement for certain defendants to move to dismiss or otherwise answer, and prudence 25 dictates that no such further steps, or any steps, be taken to litigate these cases until the Court has 26 applied the statutory procedures in title II of FISAAA to determine whether they may be continued 27 at all. Title II of FISAAA was enacted for the very purpose of eliminating the burdens of litigation 28 on parties who meet the specified criteria for certification and to eliminate the risks that litigation

1 of this sort might pose to sensitive national security information. See FISA § 802(a) (providing 2 that these actions may not “be maintained” if the Attorney General makes the specified 3 certification to the district court); id. § 802(b)(1) (providing that any such certification “shall be 4 given effect” unless the court finds the certification is unsupported by substantial evidence); id. § 5 802(f) (permitting interlocutory appeals as of right). Accordingly, the only litigation that should 6 proceed after certifications are filed is litigation concerning the validity of the statute and effect of 7 the certifications, and the United States and the carrier defendants respectfully request that the case 8 management order governing further proceedings in these matters so provide.
